

HEADLONG RACE SEEKS TO EVADE ANNIHILATION

Allied Forces Crushing In
On Ardennes From West,
North And South

medy and east of Stavelot today without making contact with the enemy.

Farther to the west, American First Army tanks and infantrymen swung down through the northern flank of the salient at a fast clip after caving in the Germans' strongest defenses around La Roche and Samree.

Only a narrow corridor about eight miles wide remained open in the western end of the salient between the American First Army and Lt. Gen. George S. Patton's Third pushing up from the south.
Third armored columns pushing eastward in that area made gains of up to more than two miles in the last 24 hours.

Bridgeheads Pounded
Over towards the Rhine, American Seventh army troops were battling to reduce the German bridgeheads northwest of Strasbourg and to push back the enemy salients in the Bitch and Wis-sembourg areas.

The German threat to the Meuse and the Allied supply system in Belgium, which was one of the main objectives of the Nazi counter-offensive has been definitely ended and is not likely to be renewed.

The outcome is a satisfying victory for the American and British forces, but front line dispatches reveal a tinge of disappointment over the fact that Field Marshal Karl von Rundstedt seems to be in a position to get out a large part of his 29 divisions without disastrous losses.

ITALY EXPECTS ALLIES TO GIVE HER $350,000,000

ROME, Jan. 11.—Italy will need about $350,000,000 from the Allies to rehabilitate agriculture and the transportation and electrical industries during the coming year, the government announced today in estimates prepared at the request of Allied authorities.

Needs included locomotives, trucks, fertilizers, farm implements and parts for electrical machinery broken up during the war.

Italian authorities estimated that Italy would be able to export goods valued at $200,000,000 during 1945.

IDENTITY OF 24 PLANE CRASH VICTIMS SOUGHT

LOS ANGELES, Jan. 11.—Army and airline officials today sought to identify the bodies of 24 persons killed when an American Airlines passenger plane crashed in the foothills after turning away from the fog-shrouded Burbank airport yesterday.

The victims included 18 Army men, three sailors and three crew members. All apparently were killed instantly when the plane plowed into the slope and exploded. The plane was bound from New York.

The pilot, Capt. J. R. McCauley, reported to the Burbank control tower and was advised that fog limited visibility to two miles and ceiling to 700 feet.

With sufficient gasoline for an additional three and a half hours, McCauley headed for an emergency field at Palmdale, 60 miles away, rather than attempt a Burbank landing. The plane was not heard from again.

Six hours later the fog lifted temporarily and the wreckage was sighted from the control tower.
Search parties were delayed another two hours in reaching the scene by the brush-covered terrain and mist.

JAP FLEET MAY HAVE TO FIGHT

In the initial invasion of Luzon.
Experts here said the Japanese could hardly hope to get any sizable troop convoy through the American ring except through a major naval venture. That would mean that the imperial fleet, which suffered seriously in the recent battle of the Philippines, would again have to challenge a U. S. Navy that has long waited and hoped for a full-scale showdown.

Gen. Douglas MacArthur said when his forces first stormed ashore in the Philippines that he intended to cut off the Japanese from their conquered empire in the East Indies and Malaya. His project is well on the way to being accomplished.

Japan's dwindling merchant fleet is finding it increasingly dangerous to make the journey from the Indies to Japan itself.
American submarines alone have taken a heavy toll of shipping in the South China sea.

During the earlier part of the war, the American sub crews bore the brunt of the fight against Japan-bound merchantmen. But now they have been joined by superbattleships and other bombers from China as well as aircraft from bases on Leyte and Mindoro.
New bases on Luzon will add still another hazard to the enemy and

1200 STRIKERS BACK ON JOBS AFTER 10 DAYS

PITTSBURGH, Jan. 11.—War production at two plants of the Pittsburgh Equitable Meter Co. resumed today after a ten-day strike, as 1,200 workers returned to their benches and agreed to submit their grievances to regular War Labor Board procedure.

In a meeting last night members of Local 615, CIO United Electrical, Radio, and machine workers of America, voted unanimously to end the strike after threats of "immediate and drastic" action by the regional War Labor Board.

Harry Alan Sherman, attorney and business agent of the local, said, "we have assurance from the company that the local will be recognized as heretofore, and will continue to be paid the union dues checked from the payroll, despite the international union's recent order against such payments."

FOR YOUR EFFORTS TO SAVE GAS DURING EMERGENCIES...

Yes, and the management of The Gas Company joins Uncle Sam in doffing its collective hats to you for the fine spirit of cooperation and sacrifice you showed in saving gas in the emergency. Through your curtailment, the production of critical war plants was disrupted only slightly. The service itself was maintained in some communities and neighborhoods where it would have failed if you and thousands of others had not unselfishly restricted your uses of gas. And we are sure you will join us in thanking other gas companies and the War Production Board for their assistance during the emergency. Their timely efforts helped keep war industries producing and held inconvenience to a minimum.

For many months every possible step has been taken to reduce the severity of these emergencies. We have hope that the situation can be bettered before another winter and promise to correct it when the restrictions of war can be raised. Meanwhile, the everyday savings of gas in your home will help lessen the severity and frequency of gas emergencies. The Gas Company is most appreciative of your past cooperation and knows your help can be counted upon in the future.

THIS PROGRESS

THE Battle of Belgium seems to have turned into the greatest military struggle of modern history—possibly the greatest ever. It is fought by two huge armies, each composed of many smaller armies. Millions of men are fighting, directly and indirectly, on a front composed of many fronts, with all the varied and destructive weapons known to mechanized warfare.

They are fighting it in the snow, at a time of year when military leaders formerly would have considered such warfare impossible. It is indeed a far cry from the Winter quarters of our army in the American Revolution, a century and a half ago, to this vast, world-shaking conflict in which our armies are engaged now in the Old World, side by side with our original enemies.

It is all one world now, brought together perhaps inevitably by the clash of rival nations in what we quaintly call "modern progress." And if it were to last many years, this mechanical and scientific progress would wreck the world.

When will nations learn that the only real progress on this earth is the progress of men and women in the practice of good will and cooperation? Science is a mockery and a delusion, when pursued apart from friendly virtues and mutual help.

DEBTS DROPPING

PEOPLE are paying off their debts. This is the report of Henry S. Sherman, a Cleveland bank president, who says that big cuts are being made in mortgage and personal loans, and savings accounts are rising in record fashion.

Cleveland home owners last year reduced their principal on mortgage loans by $7,000,000. Before the war the average mortgage borrower took more than five years to pay off his loan. Many took 20 or more. Now the average borrower is doing it in less than four and a half.

Another sign of debt reduction is that personal loans are only 50 per cent of what they were in 1941. Then, as a rule, borrowers needed a year to pay off their obligations. Now they are doing it in half that time.

Evidently some of the big war plants are being put to good use.

At least restaurants have not yet had to issue tokens for customers to save, 10 tokens to be good for a pat of butter.

The latest original war feat is that of Lieut. Paul C. Harold of Galesburg, Kan., an air pilot, who caught a Nazi train in a tunnel and captured it by blowing up both ends.

People are taking back the things they said about General Patton.

'Tis better to have snowed a lot than never to have snowed at all.

German Drive to Greatly Raise Allied Casualties

Wallace Leads Candidates
For Labor Secretaryship

Special to Central Press

WASHINGTON—History repeats itself on the western front. Look for the German counter-offensive to raise Allied casualty rates far beyond present totals due to the slow, grinding attritional type of warfare between infantry units reminiscent of the costly battles of 1918.

Military experts are agreed that Field Marshal Gerd von Rundstedt's attack was planned to come at a time of bad weather and that Allied casualties might have been lower than the now anticipated total if United States and British aircraft could have gotten into operation earlier.

Now the campaign appears to have resolved itself into the kind of fighting which shot up dead, wounded and captured totals in 1918 in the Ardennes forest, at Verdun, the Second Marne and Cambrai actions. In those engagements, as now, it was man against man and armor against armor. Military circles still recall how the Canadian Princess Pat Division suffered appalling casualties in World War I. Of course, the casualties work both ways, with the Germans today suffering heavy losses and apparently determined—if the counter-offensive proves to be their last major effort—to exact as many Allied losses as possible before the end comes.

VICE-PRESIDENT HENRY A. WALLACE, who becomes merely Citizen Wallace after President Roosevelt's fourth term inauguration Jan. 20, is believed to have the inside track on Frances Perkins'

NEWS BEHIND THE NEWS

By PAUL MALLON

WASHINGTON, Jan. 11—The Germans did not get the power for their break through our lines from the Russian front.

They picked some of it from Finland, Norway and Denmark, but most of it came from reserves built up by reorganization of the elements which straggled home from the lost battle of France. The constant increase of Nazi strength since September can be attributed to that latter circumstance—and it constantly grows greater.

Carefully, von Rundstedt and his generals (and Hitler was in on it according to my information) chose the time and place skillfully.

The spot was a portion of the line which both the Nazis and our army had loosely held, any concentration there could easily break through either side. But their concentration went undetected by us.

Not a note of advance warning did we have because the weather favored their enterprise not only with rain, but with low hanging clouds. The clouds prevailed for several days after the break-through so we could not use our air power, on which we relied heavily to offset any such offensive (planes are disastrous to such offensives which necessarily are closely-knit and therefore easily detected and damaged, while defensive operations can be scattered and therefore be comparatively safe from air destruction.)

The break-through strategy itself was nothing new and could have been anticipated. The Nazis constantly used such tactics in Russia when they could not otherwise stop an advance.

The Nazis have used up their reserves for this fight. When their initial move met success, they threw everything loose into it. Our next advance should meet less resistance.

European political events have endangered the chances of getting the Dumbarton Oaks agreement through the senate—when and if final agreement is reached with Russia.

That agreement, as far as it has progressed, proposes a close-tied world organization than ever before to preserve finally and forever the kind of world we have at the end of the war. It would make permanent the status quo at the war's conclusion.

Naturally as the status quo becomes less and less pleasing to all the parties involved, interest in preserving it permanently, becomes less.

For instance, if we are going to have a balance of power politics in Greece, it will be difficult to preserve. If Russian borders are to be extended into Poland, we will undertake through Dumbarton action to guarantee those borders forever with our arms.

Indeed, it is conceivable that such a situation may arise in Europe where not only the senators but the administration might not be especially enthusiastic about permanently guaranteeing it.

This is a new element which has entered into the private discussions here. It will become important only as developments from Europe direct, and will simmer and die if those developments become more satisfactory.

For the present, I would say congress is dividing into two camps: those who say the Atlantic Charter was a war ideal which hardly could have proved acceptable to Russia in the end, but well served its war purposes, and those who suspect the people will be shocked to find now that our advertised war hopes have been taken abroad so lightly.

DIET AND HEALTH

The "Sore Throat"

By LOGAN CLENDENING, M.D.

"SORE THROAT" is a household diagnosis which covers a multitude of things.

All common colds are divided into three parts—nose, throat and chest.

Dr. Clendening will answer questions of general interest only, and then only through his column.

bronchi. Sometimes just one is involved at a time. Sometimes everything is involved—there is running from the nose, sore throat and chest, and coughing.

Sometimes the whole thing starts in the nose, works down to the throat, and lands in the chest. Most often it starts in the throat and works both directions—that is one kind of sore throat. If you look in such a throat you see a red palate with little yellowish, glistening spots scattered over it—follicular pharyngitis.

Acute Tonsillitis

Another kind of sore throat is acute tonsillitis. That is a strictly throat affair—and a good thing too because if the same amount of trouble as is kicked up in the throat by a pair of acute tonsils were to spread to the nose and chest it would be early Christian torture.

Then, whenever a sore throat turns up, especially if the prostration is out of proportion to the fever or soreness, one has to think of diphtheria and make an immediate throat culture.

The strep throat is somewhere in between all of these. It may have a membrane on the pharynx that looks like diphtheria, it may involve the tonsils almost exclusively. It is certainly prostrating and makes you good and sick.

Varieties of "Strep"

The streptococcus is a fine, round little germ that grows in the form of chains. There are many varieties of it—one causes erysipelas, and one scarlet fever. Other varieties are responsible for puerperal fever and forms of acute heart disease. The kind you have in the pharynx in a "strep sore throat" may be any of these, so it is best not to treat it with contempt. Select rather one of the sulfa drugs. It can be identified and differentiated from diphtheria by a throat culture.

We are surrounded by streptococci all the time and carry some around in our mouth cavities and noses. But we are used to them and have developed immunity to them and they give us no bother. It is when we get an overwhelming dose of a strange variety that we are in danger of coming down with strep sore throat.

Many epidemics have been traced to infected milk, the milk being just loaded with colonies of streptococci which come maybe from some food handler—dairy man, milk man, waitress, cook. You may get on a street car or a bus, or go to a movie and sit next to someone who is just coming down with a fine case of it and breathing out gobs of streptococci in all directions. They are very contagious and tend to go in epidemics.

Develop Immunity

I don't want to scare anybody by all this. There is really no way to avoid it. Certainly the worst thing is to withdraw yourself from life and refuse to go on buses or to the movies. The best thing is to develop immunity to all varieties of strep. Take me who have for more years than I want to tell jammed into crowds and movie houses from Oregon to Russia. I don't suppose it would be possible to give me a strep sore throat. Knock on wood.

But the serious dangers that used to accompany a strep sore throat are pushed into the background now that we have the sulfa drugs to treat such conditions with. These chemicals are especially deadly to streptococci. In fact in the first period of their use they were supposed to be effective only against streptococci. Now we have found they are useful against other infections. Given in adequate dosage they knock out a strep sore throat and stop the dangers of complications in about 48 hours. There are two now—sulfadiazine and sulfamerazine—that are highly effective against streptococci and produce almost no disagreeable toxic symptoms in the patient.

CHAPTER TWENTY-NINE

The things she'd told him she had to do began looking for Perry Dawson. Gresham Institute was twenty miles the other side of the hollow. Daphne was so tired, fearful of falling asleep at the wheel, she didn't dare speed on the open road.

It took her nearly an hour and a half to get to the laboratory where an attendant told her that Mr. Dawson would not be there. It was, he reminded her, a holiday—the Fourth of July.

"Well, happy holiday!" she said giddily, getting back into her car, wondering why the man gave her such a funny look.

Daphne did feel "sort of foggy." But then few people can stay up all night and be fresh in the morning.

Daphne drove into the village to Barker's drug store. Its genial proprietor said she looked as if she hadn't had any sleep for a week; and told her that the Dawsons lived on Parker street, six miles out of the village.

It was after 10 a. m. when Daphne found the little frame house with the dressmaker's sign. But Perry Dawson was not there.

"Perry's spending the holiday with the Turners," his mother told Daphne. "He and Elizabeth are engaged, and there's a party up at her house."

Daphne headed the car for the Turner estate.

The Turner butler responded to her ring, and she said, "Grainger, is Mr. Dawson here? I must see him at once."

"They've all gone to the lake, Mrs. Abruzzi."

Daphne collapsed on a hall bench. "I can't go to the lake," she muttered.

"They'll be back for lunch at one." "Grainger," she looked at him appealingly—"I've been up all night."

"You look very pale. Can I get you something?"

"Yes, I want to lie down. I ought not to—some danger warned her, but she couldn't grasp it, she was so sleepy—"But I must. Just have to sleep now. Will you see that I'm awakened—as soon as Mr. Dawson comes back?"

Grainger promised and called one of the maids who took her upstairs, gave her a pair of Bufo pajamas, pulled the shades, and promised to let her know as soon as the party returned.

"Not the party, just Mr. Dawson!" Daphne said, and was asleep instantly.

Hours later, she woke from a fevered dream, feeling her hot hand in a cool one, and saw that Perry was grinning at her from her bedside. Or was it a Cheshire cat bobbing at her?

"Hi, Daphne! Heard you wanted to see me alone, and I thought it was of Steve."

"Stop bobbing up and down." His grin disappeared instantly and he put his hand to her cheeks—alarm leapt to his eyes.

"Perry, I had to see you." She spoke fast, breathlessly, as if she had been running. "There's something you've got to do. Steve hasn't anyone but you and me. That's why I did it. If it works for me, you'll do it?"

"Do what?" he asked, feeling her pulse racing under his finger-tips.

Daphne pulled up her sleeve. There was a tiny pin point of purple in a widening circle of red on her arm. "No one answered his call for volunteers . . . so I did. Don't worry, it'll be fine. I know how to do it."

At that moment, Buff came to the bedroom door, and Perry shouted at her. "Keep out of here! Call Dr. McIntosh and get him over here as fast as you can!"

"I want Steve," Daphne moaned, "It has to be Steve."

"Sure, sure! Tell me what time you gave yourself the shot, and then keep quiet."

"Five o'clock," she said, closing her eyes again. "Perry, I feel awful, but I know it's going to be all right."

"You bet. We'll get Steve over. Everything's going to be okay." Under his breath he added fervently, "I hope."

Daphne's eyes were open and sometimes they seemed to be fixed on his face, but she didn't know him. The masked figures—and he was one of them—making a circle about her hospital bed, were no part of the world of her delirium.

Dr. Fenwick (her Steve)—his bloodless face like granite—stood at the foot of the bed. Beside him, Dr. Lindquist, and back of him, Drs. Porter, Rabinowitz, and Schuyler. They had their eyes fixed on Dr. McIntosh, who stood by the side of the bed, with his fingers on her wrist.

At the other side of the bed, a nurse held a thermometer in the sick girl's mouth.

There was no sound in the room save for the labored, tortured breathing of the fever-ridden body under the sheet.

The nurse removed the thermometer and handed it to Dr. McIntosh. The eyes of the five watching physicians shifted to his face as he read it. He turned slowly, his eyes now upon Dr. Fenwick's face.

Steve said, "Yes, Doctor?" "Her life is in your hands, Fenwick. If your serum can save her, it's the only thing that will."

The atmosphere of the room was tense as Steve scrubbed, slipped his hands into the gloves held for him, and went toward the bed, hypodermic needle in hand.

He stood there, looking down at her for a moment, a prayer in his heart.

The nurse rolled back the sleeve of the hospital shirt, disclosing a thin arm, burning to her touch, washed it with a dab of cotton and stepped back. Dr. Fenwick promptly made the vital injection.

"That's it, gentlemen," he said. "We'll not know the results for twenty-four hours, unless . . . his voice subsided into silence."

His fellow doctors moved out silently.

"Coming, Fenwick?" Schuyler asked.

"Coming, Fenwick?" Schuyler asked.

"Coming, Fenwick?" Schuyler asked.

"Coming, Fenwick?" Schuyler asked.

"Coming, Fenwick?" Schuyler asked.

"Coming, Fenwick?" Schuyler asked.

"Coming, Fenwick?" Schuyler asked.

"Coming, Fenwick?" Schuyler asked.

"Steve didn't know how much later it was that the nurse asked if she should send relief while she went out to get her supper. He shook his head. 'I'll stay here,' he said."

Along with the sick girl, he sat by her bed, watching her as if his eyes could not move from her face, feeling in his own body the torture that racked her.

It was the other torture—the not knowing if he had done what was right—that was hardest to bear. He had let her suffer for three days, knowing he would not have hesitated an hour had this been any other than Daphne.

In his heart inarticulate things stirred. The radiance of the moon riding high drew his eyes to the window and he got up and went to it, looking up into the night sky, knowing that there was a power beyond science, that whatever he might do, he was only an instrument of God in this supreme effort.

Steve stood there for a long time, unconscious of the wind rustling the trees and cooling the isolation ward, of the chiming of the Town Hall clock, of the beat of insect wings against the screen. He heard only the terrible breathing at his back . . . would Daphne die?

That grim thought haunted him even while he slept fitfully during a few hours the next day, preparing himself for the crisis the night would bring.

The watch was not his alone. The others were there: Drs. Schuyler, McIntosh, Rabinowitz and Lindquist.

Twenty hours, twenty-one, twenty-two . . .

Again Steve stood with his back to the room, his hands clasped behind him as he looked beyond the horizon where dark clouds were piling up, bringing a storm that was already wailing in the tree tops.

The world outside was filled with sound.

And in the room—

His heart seemed to stand still. The sound of her breathing had stopped.

Steve turned very slowly. And saw the men in white lean over the bed, and it seemed to him that he could not look, and yet he found himself crossing the room, gazing down at her.

Daphne's parched lips were closed. Veins were blue lines in the ashen pallor of her temples. Gone was her fevered flush, leaving her thin cheeks waxy, peaceful.

The sheet above her bosom moved slowly, evenly. She opened her eyes for an instant and closed them again. She was asleep.

Steve knew then that she would live.

He went out of the room, out of the building, and walked through the night with his face lifted to what lay beyond the storm, above the stars themselves.

When the day broke he returned to the hospital. Perry Dawson was with him.

PRO GRID LOOP DEFERS ACTION UNTIL SPRING

CHICAGO, Jan. 11.—The National Football league marked time along with other professional sports today to wait until the government definitely decides the future of wartime professional athletics.

Despite the vigorous protests of Owner George P. Marshall of the Washington Redskins, the rest of the league's 10 club owners and officials voted yesterday to sit tight and not discuss 1945 plans until the white house or congress clarifies its wishes regarding the continuance of sports.

In taking its position in sports-don't "watch and wait" line, the N. F. L. joined baseball, pro basketball and intercollegiate athletic conferences—sporting groups which have told the government they are awaiting orders.

The pro football leaders abruptly adjourned their annual meeting yesterday after less than

NCAA STUDIES SPORTS FUTURE

Most Important Meeting In History Opens Today In Columbus

COLUMBUS, O., Jan. 11.—The National Collegiate Athletic association, faced with the responsibility of perpetuating at least a token sports program for the duration and with making long range plans for the return of American doughboys, went into the most momentous annual meeting in its history today.

More than 1,000 faculty representatives, football coaches and other collegiate sports personalities were scheduled to attend the three day sessions. The American Football Coaches association and the College Physical Education association held their annual meetings in connection with the N. C. A. A. sessions.

Philip O. Badger of New York University, the N. C. A. A. president sounded the keynote for the meetings when he said that paramount in the discussions would be the plans for post war inter-collegiate athletics.

"There will be a tremendous boom in the volume of inter-collegiate athletics in the post war period," he said. "The G. I. bill of rights will bring hundreds of fine, ambitious young men from the battle fronts to our college campuses and it is our job to build a suitable athletic program for them."

Badger said that there would be considerable discussion of what steps will be taken to keep collegiate sports in operation despite increased inroads of selective service for 4-F athletes.

The rules committee of the Football Coaches association was expected to vote on proposed changes which were placed into effect successfully last season by eastern colleges. These include prohibiting the out-of-bounds kickoff and the permitting of forward passes anywhere behind the line of scrimmage. The delegates will not act on any proposed changes, however, but will submit them to the N. C. A. A. rules committee which meets next month.

The chief topic on the agenda of the physical education association will be the rehabilitation of wounded veterans through participation in college athletics.

Among the speakers at a joint meeting of all the groups will be Dr. Howard L. Bevis, president of Ohio State University; Col. Emory (Swede) Larson, former Navy football coach, now in the Marine corps; and Brig. Gen. William E. Welsh of the Army Air Forces.

NAVY WINS OPENER

ANNAPOLIS, Md., Jan. 11.—Navy's basketball team held the right today to classification with the powerhouse quintets of the nation, following its 70 to 33 rout of the University of Maryland Terrapins in its opening game of the season.

Action on the player draft, 1945 schedule, franchise applications, rule suggest and other business was deferred until April, when the league owners will gather in New York.

ROBINSON WINS

WASHINGTON, Jan. 11.—Ray (Sugar) Robinson of New York, the uncrowned king of the welterweights, put his 46th victory in 47 starts into the books today, with Billy Furrone of Philadelphia his latest victim in two rounds of their scheduled 10-round bout here last night.

RELAYS UP TO ODT

PHILADELPHIA, Jan. 11.—Officials of the annual Penn relays carnival have asked the Office of Defense Transportation to rule on whether the meet, scheduled for April 27 and 28, is included in the ban against conventions and large gatherings.

FORM CUTS DOWN

CHICAGO, Jan. 11.—The Racing Form, long-established horse racing dope sheet, announced today suspension of its Wednesday paper for an indefinite period, indicating that the present ban on racing in the United States may force it to shut down entirely for the duration. The form, which publishes six days a week, missed its first day in more than 40 years yesterday when it failed to publish "because there were no results or past performances to print."

- CELLIST GUEST
- Leonard Rose, first cellist of the New York Philharmonic Symphony Orchestra, will be the guest on "Stars of the Future", Friday.
- SCOURGE CAPTURED
- One of the most hair-raising hunts in the annals of the FBI, the search for two desperate criminals of the Old South, is dramatized on

- the latest of "The FBI in Peace and War" series, "Scourges of the South," on Saturday.
- KARLOFF DUFFY GUEST
- Boris Karloff takes over a new "haunt" when he crashes "Duffy's Tavern" Friday.
- PSYCHO-NEUROSIS TOPIC
- Problems presented by war-induced psycho-neurosis will be dramatized on "Assignment Home," the Army Service Forces radio series, in its broadcast Saturday. One of the most trying situations brought about by the war is the case of the soldier, psychologically unfit for further Army duty, although he is perfectly suited for

- normal civilian life. Returning him to civilian life without burdening him with the psychological and social stigma of mental unbalance is one of the Army's greatest problems.
- RADIO NEWS NOTES
- Though there is no official verdict following an "America's Town Meeting" debate, the affirmative seems to have come out on top in the recent debate on the question, "Should All Germans Be Punished for Nazi Crimes and Atrocities?" With replies from 3,293 listeners in 42 states tabulated, 45 percent favor the affirmative, 39 percent are for the negative, and 16 percent did not express a choice. In the radio debate, Major Erwin Lessner and Wilson Woodside upheld the affirmative, with Dorothy Thompson and M. J. Coldwell speaking for the negative.

Bob Burns' next film is expected to find him cast as a hog farmer, the role he plays each week on his program as well as every day in reality on his "Bazooka Berk" farm.

Keenan Wynn, recent guest star on "Suspense," is going to surprise a lot of people in his next film, unless he visits a barber. Keenan showed up for the broadcast wearing a heavy moustache and went almost unrecognized by the show's producer, Bill Spier, who shouldn't let a moustache throw him, having sported an ear-to-ear beard for years.

Kay Raht just can't escape playing mother roles. She's famous as the mama of Henry in "The Aldrich Family," but when she was called in for a role on "David Harding—Counterspy," Kay had an idea that the worm would turn, at least once. No dice: Although other actors have reversed their characterizations, turning into fiends of the first water on the espionage series, Kay was cast as a mama and remained the purveyor of sweetness and light!

First of the new Douglas A-29 attack bombers to come off the assembly line was jointly christened this week by Garry Moore and Jimmy Durante. After giving a half hour show for the plant employees, Moore and Durante were guests of honor at ceremonies involving the ship's send-off. The plane, incidentally, bears the caricatures and autographs of the comedy team on its fuselage.

Admiral Chester W. Nimitz will speak on March of Time Thursday.

VET WINS ELECTION

AKRON, Colo.—In the Colorado State Legislature convening January 3 will be 30-year-old discharged army sergeant Jack McMillon, who captured his seat by a "write-in" campaign which gave him the biggest majority of any candidate on the county ballot. McMillon lost his right leg in the Italian campaign and was returned to this country last August. Just four days before the election, American Legion members asked him to run for state representative and he finished ahead in 15 of the county's 16 precincts.

Circleville Ready To Play Full Role In Fuel Saving Program

BYRNES ORDERS SIGNS, WINDOW LIGHTS CUT OFF

Home Owners, Business Houses Asked To Keep Buildings Cooler

Downtown Circleville will be darker and coats worn in the home may be a standard custom next week, as residents of the community follow out the newest orders of War Mobilization Director James F. Byrnes.

Warning that a serious coal shortage (already felt in Circleville) is impending, Byrnes Wednesday night ordered a drastic conservation program which he said was the only alternative to coal rationing.

The program included:
1. A ban on all outdoor advertising, ornamental and display lighting using electricity produced from coal. This was expected to save 2,000,000 tons yearly in the nation.

2. A plea to householders, managers of apartment and office buildings, hotels and stores to permit temperatures to go no higher than 68 degrees as a means of saving another 14,000,000 tons of coal.

3. An order to the Office of Defense Transportation to eliminate all special and excursion trains and to freeze schedules to resort areas at the normal year-around levels, rather than at the seasonal peak.

Great Saving
Byrnes said 1945 coal production was expected to amount to about 580,000,000 tons while present estimated requirements are 620,000,000 tons. He hoped that rationing could be avoided because it would involve unwieldy administrative problems and create a demand for new workers at a time of a critical manpower shortage.

"I am certain," he said, "that the public will support wholeheartedly a coal conservation program which will assure the coal essential for war purposes."

Byrnes ordered the War Production Board to implement the ban on lighting in areas served with electricity produced with the use of coal.

WPB officials met today with more than 30 power industry officials to discuss enforcement steps. There is a possibility, it was said, that municipal authorities rather than electric companies will be asked to bear the burden of enforcement problems.

Mayor To Cooperate
Mayor Ben H. Gordon said Thursday city officials will "gladly go along" if local officials are called on to carry out any enforcement problems in the program.

He said that he believed Circleville merchants would be "very cooperative" in cutting out extra lights and use of fuel to save coal for the national war effort.

Charles Gilmore, manager of the local office of the Columbus and Southern Ohio Electric company, said that a considerable amount of coal could be saved through darkening of electric signs and shop window illumination in Circleville. He said his company had set an example more than a year ago by cutting out use of its large sign and lighting of windows.

Like all power companies, the company which serves this area faces the problem of reduced supplies of coal. Manpower problems have made the delivered supplies lower. The company has an adequate supply at present, but is anticipating the possibility of shortages in the future.
